INSPIRE – CLARIFY – ALIGN – UNLEASH

Four Leadership Imperatives that Drive Greatness

Keynote Speaker: Rebecca Hession, FranklinCovey

The strength of your leadership has never been more important than it is today in determining the success of your projects, cultural transformation and the overall organization. But “old school” leadership styles just don’t work in the Knowledge Worker Age. People cannot be managed as if they are simply assets—or worse, liabilities—viewed in the organizational scheme on the same level as office furniture or computers. In order to unleash the potential of their team, today’s leaders must see workers as “whole people” who have a unique contribution to make in moving the organization forward. Leaders must manage the knowledge each worker brings to the table, not just the tasks those workers are responsible for completing.

Great leaders not only see the world differently, they do things differently. Specifically, these skills can be defined as the 4 Imperatives—critical, essential functions of great leaders that:

- Inspire trust among direct reports, superiors, and peers.
- Clarify purpose by articulating why goals are established and how individual work contributes to those goals.
- Align systems and work processes so they facilitate rather than hinder achievement.
- Unleash the unique talents and contributions of people on their team.

In meeting these essential requirements, leaders ensure that they will be able to tap the full potential of their team in achieving the organization’s most important goals. And they will be able to achieve superior results not just in the short term, but year after year—consistently, measurably, predictably.
